Mr. William E. Colby
Director of Central Intelligence
Washington, D.C. 20505

Dear Mr. Colby:

An article which I began researching one year before retiring from the Agency was published in the recent issue of Studies in Intelligence. I wish here to request that my article be declassified under the terms of Executive Order 11652, dated March 10, 1972.

My article bears the title [redacted]

STA

[redacted]
classified documents used for this study originated in CIA and the Department of State. All data from the two periods cited except for Mr. [redacted] article in Studies, Volume XII, No. 1. I note that Executive Order 11652 includes the following provision: "Secret information and material...shall be...declassified at the end of the 8th full calendar year following the year in which it was originated." [redacted] article, which I believe was done within the past eight years, is not essential to my needs. It does, however, cast the Agency's senior analysts in a highly favorable light.

My motivation here is to effect a significant breakthrough in the training of analysts and others who must specialize on foreign area problems "from a distance." Training for such persons in "the intercultural and psychological dimension of international affairs" is only now beginning to take shape. Case material is badly needed, and my article appears to make a unique contribution. In addition, its basic message should no doubt be communicated via a professional journal to all who seek new approaches in the planning and conduct of foreign relations.

All of the documents referred to are available in the Office of Training's Intelligence Institute, where I was posted prior to my retirement in June 1973.

Sincerely,

STA
